The Bread Loaf School of English, one of the Summer Language Schools of Middlebury College, offers programs leading to the degree of Master of Arts in English and the advanced Master's degree, the Master of Letters.

The Master of Letters program builds in a concentrated and specialized way on the broader base of the Master of Arts in English, which is the first prerequisite for this degree. Students at the time of admission will select an area of literary concentration either in a period such as the Renaissance or in a genre like the novel or in a field of special study like theatre arts or comparative literature. The Master of Letters degree can be earned in three to four summers at the Bread Loaf School of English by following an individually approved program of ten courses or Independent Reading Programs. There is no requirement of a master's thesis. A maximum of two graduate courses (six hours) may be transferred from another institution in the area of specialization if these courses are of the quality of those offered at Bread Loaf.

Applications from non-degree candidates are accepted.
